used such bad language. They hustled us out into the street and put a guard around us while they are our breakfast. They even went up on top of the building and took our flag down. Then we had the pleasure of seeing those pretty girls of Rogersville bring out their Confederate flag. The rebels marched us out of town, We met 700 other prisoners, taken up on the hill. They soon started us on the road to Belleville. hill. I was not able to walk when taken prisoner. They threw me on a horse, and I went all that day on horseback, and that evening when we stopped to feed, someone stole my horse. I never knew who stole my horse until I read Adj't. Allen's letter in THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE Allen's letter in THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE of March 7.

I never heard of our Adjutant being blamed for taking a horse before, but as I lost my horse at that very time and place, I surely must think Adjt. Allen had a hand in it. I do not blame him so much for capturing my horse as I do for some things that occurred a little later. That evening before leaving the meadow I secured another horse. Very soon after dark-all the prisoners were ordered to move out on our way to Belleville. All were afoot ex-cept the guards, Allen and myself. I cept the guards, Allen and myself. I thought I would drop back slowly and get to the rear of the column and get away, but all at once one of the guards, mounted on my horse, I suppose, called out "trot up, dare," and I had to move on. I suppose, according to T. E. Allen's letter, that he gave the command that took me to prison. That is what I blame him for. On the morning of Nov. 7 I was dismounted again, and not being able to walk, there came along a Confederate soldier, one of the guards, a good-hearted fellow. He got off his horse and walked, and let me ride. I did not learn his name, but The Occult so Simple that me ride. I did not learn his name, but it may have been Geo. V. Mosgrove. I know his bridle was made of horse hair: all but the bit, and the stirrup-straps of his saddle were made the same way. He said he made them out of horses' tails. We finally got to the cars, and I gave up my horse.—Geo. A. Smith, Whipple,
